MADISONVILLE POLICE DEPARTMENT

Officers receive specialty training

Classes essential for advancement

LKUNZ@THE-MESSENGER.COM

A little more than a year into the job, Madisonville Police Chief Wade Williams is already thinking about who may take his place and what training they need to have.

His plan is to get all of the lieutenants through both the Department of Criminal Justice Executive Development Course and the Southern Police Institute to diversify their skill sets and experiences.

"I wanted to train my replacements, you know if I ever have to leave, I want them to be able to fall into my job and not miss a lick of anything," Williams said.

One of those potential successors, Lt. Charlie Young, graduated from the Executive Development Course on Friday.

"It's not so much that our responsibilities change, but it makes us able to handle different responsibilities," Young said.

"It teaches us to adapt from managing people as a shift supervisor to managing the budget and the press and things like that in the administrative side."

The interoperability of officers that can perform a multitude of tasks makes the police department more flexible, Williams said.

"It broadens their background and their knowledge and helps in the total package of the police department," he said. "It also helps them figure out how the overall system works and how to interact with more than the day-to-day answering calls."

The course lasted five months. Young attended class for a week each month at the Department of Criminal Justice in Richmond.

He would bring back homework assignments to complete in the three-week span between classes every month.

Young read five books on successful leadership skills, completed projects, wrote papers and gave speeches as part of the class.

promotes awareness of colon cancer

There are certain misperceptions about colon cancer.

One of the most common is that it's a man's disease, said Joan Lang, a cancer control specialist for the Kentucky Cancer Program.

"Both men and women develop colon cancer, and it's almost in equal proportion," she said.

March is Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month and there are a few activities planned in Madisonville this week to bring preventative measures for the often deadly disease to people's attention.

There will be a walk-through educational colon on the front lawn of Regional Medical Center from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Tuesday.

It will be staffed with nurses from endoscopy. The Kentucky Cancer Program will also have a table set up in the lobby with educational materials, she said.

The walk-through colon depicts the transition from a normal,

Cooking school coming to Madisonville

BY DOREEN DENNIS
MESSENGER STAFF WRITER
DDENNIS@THE-MESSENGER.COM

An Indiana culinary specialist will be bringing some of her mouth-watering recipes and offering cooking skills in Madisonville Tuesday night.

The Taste of Home Cooking School show with Dana Elliott will be presented live at the Glema Mahr Center for the Arts.

Doors will open at 5 p.m. Each $11 ticket includes admission, a gift bag with products, coupons and two "Taste of Home" magazines.

Local retailers and food vendors will offer a variety of items ranging from jewelry, books and magazines, candles and kitchen appliances to barbecue.

Local businesses have donated a microwave, numerous gift cards, food items, gift baskets, massages and dishware for prize drawings. There will also be a drawing for an electric Captain America motorcycle donated by the Market Place to benefit the "Groceries for Good" program during the event.

For the cooking show at 7 p.m., Elliott will demonstrate 10 new recipes for easy-to-make meals that can be prepared at home.

Elliott was at the Southern Women's Expo in Memphis this week, where she was preparing one of her most popular spaghetti entrees made with Johnsonville Italian sausage.

"Everyone has been going crazy over that recipe," Elliott said.

The food expert thinks the show in Madisonville will be a fun night out for girls and guys.

"We love it when the men come out to learn about cooking too," she said.

The annual event is sponsored by The Messenger, Market Place and Dr. Bret Wittmer of Commonwealth Biomedical Research.

Earthslide closes I-75 across Tennessee border

BY THE KENTUCKY PRESS NEWS SERVICE

FRANKFORT — Both southbound lanes of Interstate 75 have been shut down indefinitely across the Tennessee border because of the collapse of the underlying embankment.

The Tennessee Department of Transportation reports that earth under the interstate has continued to move since the collapse was discovered on Thursday. To ensure the safety of the motoring public, traffic on I-75 southbound will be detoured until the interstate can be repaired, according to a press release from the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet.

Effective immediately, I-75 South is closed at mile marker 160. Detour routes are as follows:

Exit 160 in Jellico, Tenn.; Turn left to follow U.S. 25W to LaFollette, then back to I-75 South at Exit 134 in Caryville.

Wide loads: Exit 160 in Jellico. Turn right to follow State Route 297 West to State Route 63, then back to I-75 South at Exit 141.

Detour signs and portable message boards have been placed at various locations. Motorists are advised to use caution when traveling through this area and expect delays.

Once a repair plan is finalized, the transportation department will solicit contract bids and initiate a project to repair the interstate.

Group stages rally for felon voting rights

BY KATHERAN WASSON
THE STATE JOURNAL

Former felons and activists filled the Capitol Thursday to urge Senate lawmakers to vote on a bill that would restore voting rights to thousands of Kentuckians.

House Bill 70 would reinstate a convicted felon's right to vote after serving his or her sentence. The bill would put the issue on the November ballot in the form of a proposed constitutional amendment.

People convicted of treason, intentional killing, a sex crime or bribery would be excluded. They could still seek a pardon or restoration of civil rights from the governor.

Troop 11 embraced the conservation project, following a presentation by Hopkins County extension horticulturist Andy Rideout, who believes bats have unfairly gotten a bad reputation.

Contrary to popular belief, it's rare for bats to transmit rabies to humans, according to Rideout. He said there have been only two documented cases in the nation during the past 50 years where humans have contracted rabies from bats.

Hollywood also hurts public perception of bats, he said, with movies that perpetuate the vampire legend.

West Liberty newspaper rises from rubble

BY JANET PATTON
LEXINGTON HERALD-LEADER

Like any good newspaperman, Earl Kinner is used to finding news. On March 2, the news found him.

Kinner, the owner and publisher of the 112-year-old Licking Valley Courier, sent last week's edition to print Wednesday. The next day, he published and mailed out the Wolfe County News and the Elliott County News.

Last Friday, the paper's staff left about 3 p.m., and he went home to his house across the street from the paper's offices in downtown West Liberty.

By 6:30 p.m., both house and paper were gone. Kinner made it into his basement, and the house fell down around him, said Matt Hall, publisher of the Mount Sterling Advocate. "It took them about an hour to find him," Hall said.

Kinner's son Greg and his family live nearby. Their house also was damaged, but they were unharmed, Hall said. Kinner's grandchildren apparently also helped pull a neighbor out of the rubble of her house.

The nearby newspaper building is standing, but that's about the best thing that can be said of it.

After Kinner was rescued, he stayed in a shelter. But the news-gathering itch of a lifelong newspaperman had to be scratched. He asked for a notebook and began interviewing fellow tornado survivors, said Miranda M. Cantrell, Licking Valley Courier reporter.

"I wasn't at all surprised to hear he was doing that," she said. "He told people, 'my paper's coming back,' " Cantrell said.

With phone service still hit-or-miss in Morgan County, Kinner could not be reached Thursday for comment.

Meanwhile, Cantrell, who spent three days working in a shelter near her house, which was not damaged, had the same urge.

"So many people were asking questions. Where are the businesses going to go? ... So when I came home, I started up a Facebook page for the newspaper," Cantrell said.

The Licking Valley Courier went online Tuesday and began sharing funeral information, details on a public meeting Wednesday, where the bank and the health department opened up, and what's open and where around West Liberty.

By Thursday, Cantrell's Facebook page had more than 500 followers and was growing.

The page promises: "The LVC will be there to cover it when Morgan County rises again!"

"I didn't really know what else to do to help," she said. "People have said, 'When we see that paper again, it will make us feel a whole lot better, that we still have that piece of the community.'"

Thursday, a day late but still a near-miracle, West Liberty had that piece back.

The Licking Valley Courier was printed by the Mount Sterling Advocate, with additional photos and stories from papers all over the region, including Morehead, Salyersville and Lexington.

And with Cantrell's coverage of the tornado and the cleanup.

There wasn't much advertising — all the region's businesses are still trying to figure out how to reopen — but the paper managed to salvage its subscriber lists, so copies went out in the mail and to post office boxes and anywhere single copies can be sold.

And Cantrell was there to see the presses roll.

"It's what we do," she said. "It's a calling. It's our life and we want to do our part. And make people realize that what we have here is worth fighting for. People in Morgan County want to build back, better than ever."

Abandoned Pike mines blow out

BY BRUCE JUSTICE
APPALACHIAN NEWS-EXPRESS

Two major mine blowouts that occurred within hours of each other at opposite ends of Pike County have left some wondering whether the events were simply uncanny coincidences or an ominous warning of more like events to come.

Officials say the first blowout came around 4 p.m. Tuesday on Kentucky 468 near the Hatfield Volunteer Fire Department building, with the second occurring around 1 a.m. Wednesday at Little Robinson Creek near Virgie.

No one was injured as a result of the blowouts, and little to no damage to nearby buildings or dwellings at either location was incurred, officials said.

However, water from the blowouts escaped into nearby streams, prompting warnings about potential dangers in drinking water supplies.

At Hatfield, what initially began as a slow and docile seepage quickly erupted into an avalanche of water and debris, sending a torrential muddy mixture to the road and surrounding area below.

"When I got here (the water) was just beginning to come out from the side of the hill ... it was a few minutes after that, that the whole thing just blew out," said Lawrence Dingess, Hatfield Volunteer Fire Department chief.

Dingess said he expected such an event would occur at some point and attempted to let state officials know of the danger. His concerns, he said, went unheeded.

"We knew this thing was going to happen; it was just a matter of time," he said. "There's been visible seepage for some time now. We contacted the mine people about it, but nothing was ever done."

Some water made its way down to the fire department building, but because the elevation of the ground on which the building sits is higher than the adjacent roadway, the building suffered no damage, Dingess said.

Most of the water flowed across Kentucky 468 — temporarily shutting down that road to traffic — and into the nearby, already rain-swollen creek.

Pike County Emergency Management Director Doug Tackett said because black water was discharged from the blowout at Little Robinson Creek and ran into a nearby stream, the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources was notified and that agency sent personnel to the scene to monitor the effects on fish and other wildlife.

Tackett said it is believed that the black water originated from the remnants of sludge that likely was pumped into a worked-out mine by a now defunct coal preparation plant that operated in the area in the 1960s, prior to laws prohibiting companies from pumping such material into the mountains.

The black water was discharged into a tributary of Shelby Creek, which converges with the Big Sandy River at Shelbiana, causing the waterways to run black and gray for a time Thursday.

"The blowout at Little Robinson Creek had water coming out of four different locations, with three of those having flowed into Robinson Creek," he said. "The fourth one came out beside a mobile home, but didn't really threaten that residence."

"The Robinson Creek blowout didn't have as much water coming out of it as the one at Hatfield; however, it's still likely to be a few days before it completely runs down," Tackett continued. "But with the black water, there is always a threat to fish and wildlife, which is why we immediately contacted the fish and wildlife people."

While it is unusual for two blowouts to occur within hours of one another, officials say the two events don't necessarily portend additional events occurring in other places any time soon, nor does the timing necessarily rule them out.

Mark Meade, the acting director of Division of Abandoned Mines in Frankfort, believes the blowouts were more of a result of the time of year in which they occurred than anything else.

or more mosquitoes an hour, more than purple martins," he said. "They also are probably the only insect consumer that works throughout the night. ... They provide many, many more benefits than negatives."

Bats, which are threatened by a fungal disease called white nose syndrome, could use a little more public understanding.

The disease started in the state of New York, Rideout said, and threatens bats throughout the Midwest. Although humans cannot be infected by the disease, they can spread it by carrying the fungus on their shoes, he said.

"Several caves in Indiana and Kentucky, including some at state parks, are closed for public use," he said. "... If you go in and pick up some of this fungus on your shoes and you have a bat population living in your woods, then you're going to transmit the disease to that group as well."

That's where bat houses come into play. The narrow boxes can provide a safe, dark roosting place for bats during the daylight hours in urban areas where there are not enough trees for natural habitat.

Although there are about 15 species of bats in Kentucky, the houses will primarily attract small and large brown bats — the most prevalent species in the region.

Lowe's donated lumber for the Scouts' project, while Cumens Lumber Co. provided nails.

Troop Scoutmaster Duke Gaston and Jim Rush precut the lumber to the size needed to make the houses, which are approximately 12 inches by 17 inches.

A team of four Scouts assembled the structures, placing wire mesh and hammering in nails. Each house, which can provided a roosting place for up to 20 bats from spring to fall, took about an hour to complete.

The Scouts plan to sell bat houses for $11 at Lowe's — getting pigeonholed with only a patrol mindset or only an administrative mindset," Williams said.

The training is something that officers can take with them where ever they go.

"It not only helps the department, it helps them theirselves if they are more prepared to do higher leadership," Williams said. "It makes them an overall candidate for chief positions, or whatever it may be."

Forestry education for youth offered through 4-H activities

BY KELLIE ARNOLD
COUNTY EXTENSION AGENT FOR 4-H YOUTH DEVELOPMENT

Kentucky has an abundance of forest, most of it commercially viable through the sale of timber and nontimber products. The majority of Kentucky's timber is privately grown and processed and is one of the largest agriculture and natural resource industries in Kentucky.

The statistics are impressive: Kentucky ranks as one of the top three hardwood-producing states in the United States. Twelve million acres, almost half of Kentucky's land base, are forested. Trees make up parkland and private settings as well, so forestry offers a wide variety of learning situations for youth, personally and professionally. Youth can learn about things as varied as logging, wood industry training programs, to shiitake mushroom production.

According to the U.S. Forest Service, the total economic impact of Kentucky's forests and related industries contributes more than $8 billion each year to the state's economy, and it employs more than 30,000 people. Most of Kentucky's forests consist of hardwoods, with oaks, yellow poplar, hickories, ash, cherry and walnut contributing to the economic value of the forest industry.

Woodlands also are valuable for providing habitat to a wealth of wildlife, from black bears to bobcats. These woodlands also serve as a backdrop for much of the recreational and tourist activities in the state and provide ecosystem services such as water and air filtration, carbon sequestration and flood control.

4-H offers several opportunities for youth to expand their knowledge of forestry, including timber, ecosystems, forest management, and more, through hands-on education.

All of the 4-H forestry programs aim to:

- Develop leadership skills and character development.
- Develop appreciation of trees in various settings (yard, parks, woodlands).
- Understand the need for conservation and management of woodland resources.
- Gain practical forestry skills.

4-H programs will vary by county. Here are some examples of 4-H forestry programs:

- Basic Forestry: Younger 4-H'ers can learn by making leaf collections, leaf prints, exhibits, or displays of stems, fruit or leaves for competition at both county and state fairs.
- Junior 4-H Field Days: Four field days are scheduled annually and open to 4-H'ers ages 9 to 13. Participants learn tree identification, tree measurement, use of a compass and pacing as a way to measure distance.
- Senior 4-H Field Days: Youth ages 14 to 18 compete for a chance to send a four-person team to the National 4-H Forestry Invitational, held in July. The senior event expands upon the junior competencies, adding testing on forest health, topographic map reading, forest evaluation and competition in the Forestry Bowl.
- Leadership Program: Older teenagers who have a sincere interest in natural resources may register for this weeklong program, which teaches basic tools for forestry management in real-life situations. This is a hands-on educational program, not a recreation one. Scholarships may be available.

healthy colon to colon cancer, said Lang. It was first put on display last year.

"It's a good visual I think," she said. "It lets you know what a polyp is or might look like. It helps people understand that colon cancer starts with a polyp."

Colon screenings look for polyps. Screenings can help find the disease in the early stage and help prevent colon cancer entirely if the screening tool is a colonoscopy, Lang said.

"People think if they aren't having any signs or symptoms they are healthy," she said. "That may or may not be true."

Early colon cancer usually has no symptoms, so screenings are crucial, she said. Routine screenings are considered highly effective.

Age is the most common risk factor, with roughly 90 percent of all cases occurring in people ages 50 and up, Lang said. It's recommended that people ages 50 or older receive screenings.

People with a personal or family history of cancer, those with certain risk factors such as polyps or inflammatory bowel disease should check with their doctors about getting screened at an earlier age.

As another effort to raise awareness, free take-home self-screening kits will be available at the Merle M. Mahr Cancer Center from 4-6 p.m. Wednesday and again from 10 a.m. to noon on Friday. Interested people are encouraged to stop by and pick up a kit, she said.

Few cancers are as easy to prevent as colon cancer, Lang said, but there are about 2,600 new cases diagnosed in Kentucky every year. It's the second deadliest cancer in the state, with about 900 people dying from the disease each year.

The Kentucky Cancer Registry reported that 164 new cases were diagnosed in Hopkins County between 2005-09. There were 58 people who died from colon cancer between 2004-08.

Don't raise a mug to Rush's words

H U H , U S A

Two young ladies were seated to the right of me relaxing after a long day of college classes. They were completely oblivious to me as they were conversing about the latest news of the day.

“Out of my way,” a booming voice directed my attention to the front entrance of the Huhian Bar and Grill as Rush squeezed his pudgy body through the crowd blocking the door. His eyes searched the room and waddled toward the adjoining stool.

Snapping his fingers to get Pretty Barmaid's attention, he turned to me, and said, “I dropped by this dump to mingle with my people and have a cold beer,” Rush said, snapping his finger again. “Where is that barmaid?” He snapped his fingers again. “Be a good place to start a bar, huh?”

Pretty Barmaid asked, “May I help you?”

Yeah,” Rush grunted, glaring at Pretty Barmaid, he said, “You can draw me a cold beer, and don't make me snap twice the next time I come in here.”

Placing the palms of his hands on the bar and looking Rush in the eyes, Pretty Barmaid said, “You can snap your fingers until next year, but in my bar it's first come, first serve.” She glared at him. “You will wait for your turn or hit the road, Jack.”

“Do you know who I am?” Rush asked.

“Sir, trust me. You really don't want me to answer that question,” Pretty Barmaid said.

Rush pouted for a few minutes, and said to me, “I don't think she knows who I am.”

“I don't think she cares,” I said, sipping my beer. “I know I don't.”

“What?” Rush yelled as he paid Pretty Barmaid for his beer. “You don't know who I am either. “What kind of place is this? I'm on 600 radio stations. You do have radio here, do you not?”

“Of course we have radio,” I said, reaching for my mug. “We are selective in our listening habits.” Glancing at Rush, I added, “I guess you are not our cup of tea.”

“I don't believe this,” Rush said, reaching for his mug. “Every knows me. I'm a household word. You have to know me. I'm famous. I'm known far and wide for making provocative comments.”

“Nope,” I said, gulping my beer. “It doesn't ring a bell.” Looking at him, I asked. Are you sure you are famous?”

“Of course I'm famous,” Rush said, swigging his beer. “What kind of rube are you?” He sighed and looked around the bar and noticed the two young ladies sitting on the other side of me, and asked, “Who are they?”

“I don't know,” I said, draining my mug. “Two kids from the local college.”

“What are they talking about?” Rush asked.

“I don't know,” I said, motioning Pretty Barmaid for refills. “I'm not a party to their conversation.”

“What have you heard them say?” Rush asked, cupping his hand over his ear. “What did she say?”

“Not a word,” I said, thanking Pretty Barmaid for the refills. “My mama taught her kids not to eavesdrop.”

“Ssh,” Rush said, leaning over me. “I'm trying to hear what they are saying.”

“Why?” I asked, reaching for my fresh mug. “They are college girls. They are probably talking about their boyfriends.”

“Or they could be conspiring to overthrow the country,” Rush said.

“What?” I yelled. “Quiet,” Rush yelled, almost climbing into my lap. “I'll be darn. They are conspiring to take over the country.”

“You're nuts,” I said. “No I'm not,” Rush said, grabbing his fresh mug. “They are talking about contraception.”

“So?” I asked, christening my fresh beer. “It has been prominently in the news lately.” I glared at Rush. “College kids, since the beginning of education has taken great delight in sitting around sipping a beer and discussing the latest hot topic. Contraception is this week's hot topic.”

Rush turned up his pompous nose, and declared, “They are sluts. that's what they are — sluts.”

“That is the most vile thing I ever heard you say,” I said, plopping my mug on the bar. “And I've heard you say a lot of vile things.”

“I thought you said you didn't know who I am,” Rush said.

“I lied,” I said. “I didn't want to admit in public I know who you are.”

“Why? Are you miffed because I said these two gals are sluts?” Rush asked, lifting the mug to his mouth. “I've made a very good living calling a spade a spade. And I'm telling you that those two girls are sluts,” he raved. “And I'm telling you they are not only sluts they are also prostitutes.”

“And just what brought you to this vulgar allegation?” I asked.

“They are over there talking about contraception,” Rush said, savoring his beer. “If that's not sufficient proof that they are sluts and prostitutes I don't know what is.”

The two ladies asked Pretty Barmaid for a pitcher of beer — a rarity at the Huhian Bar and Grill.

“Rush, you're an idiot, but, of course, you've heard that before,” I said as the two ladies dumped the pitcher of beer onto Rush's fat head and proceeded to pay for the beer.

“No charge, ladies,” Pretty Barmaid said, shoving a mop into Rush's hands, and ordered, “Mop.”

How I reunited the Beach Boys

One of the advantages of growing old is the chance to reflect on moments in your life that impact others.

This is especially true for journalists. I was thinking about this recently when I heard a radio ad promoting the Beach Boys' 50th anniversary reunion national tour.

I was always a Beach Boys fan; I guess from the very moment they had their first hit. Even though I grew up just outside of Manhattan (that's New York, not Manhattan Beach, Calif.), I just loved those guys from Southern California. Their music made me want to visit L.A. and cruise Colorado Boulevard looking for that little old lady from Pasadena.

I have probably seen the Beach Boys in concert more than any other musical act. I would estimate I have seen them perform at least a dozen times in my life. Their music pulled me to Southern California throughout my early life. And I finally got a chance to move there in 1979, when the Los Angeles Herald Examiner hired me. I eventually became a senior news editor there at the age of 26.

One of my beats was entertainment. (Another became the Middle East.) During my entertainment-writing days, I put my interest in the Beach Boys to work. I wanted to know what became of “the lost Beach Boy,” David Marks.

David Marks grew up across the street from Brian, Carl and Dennis Wilson, the three brothers who formed the core of the group, along with Mike Love and Alan Jardine. At 13 years old, the guitar player became an original member of the group when it was signed by Capitol Records.

But after recording a couple albums and the huge success that followed and the demand of nationwide tours, David Marks had to leave the band.

Around 1981, I decided to try to find him for an interview on how he felt missing out on the (pardon the expression) “wave” of success that followed the group.

I found him. I interviewed. He was, indeed, somewhat morose about what he had missed out on. I wrote a compelling feature story about “the lost Beach Boy.” Shortly after it appeared in our paper, he got an invitation to appear on stage with Mike Love, who was playing locally in Southern California with his own band. Apparently, they hit it off.

I remember David Marks called me up excitedly to tell me all about it. He had been kicking around in the music business for years but had missed the limelight. He thought the reunion with Mike Love might lead to a break.

Shortly afterward, other members of the original group reunited as the Beach Boys. And now, 50 years later, they are all back.

David Marks later authored a book, “The Lost Beach Boy,” on his experiences. I plan to get a copy and read it. I'm interested to see if David Marks recalls how the article I wrote led to the first step in a historic music reunion that is still going strong all these years later.

In any case, I remember it. And I'm glad for him. That's one of the nice things about being a journalist. It's not all muckraking. It's not all turning over rocks. It's not all exposing the dark secrets. Sometimes we actually get to help people and just tell interesting stories. It's also nice being a small part of the story.

Having grown up as a Beach Boys fan, I later had the opportunity to play a role in the group's future.

That's just one of the many reasons I love my job.

Nebraska's Bob Kerrey is true American maverick

The officeholder in the Opposition Party who dares to break from his side's rigid orthodoxy is admired — by those of us in Our Party — as a courageous maverick who has the guts to take a lonely stand against party bosses. But when the rebel is in Our Party, too often we react quite differently. Then, the dissenter in our ranks is an unreliable and, probably, self-absorbed turncoat. Hypocrisy, anyone?

Let me tell you about one of my favorite mavericks, a Democrat, who served two terms in the U.S. Senate before leaving voluntarily.

Facing a tough re-election race in the very Republican year of 1994, he was assailed for having voted to outlaw assault weapons. In a TV spot, he picked up an AK-47 at a target range and said: “Twenty-five years ago in the war in Vietnam, people hunted me. They needed a good weapon like this AK-47. But you don't need one of these to hunt birds.” Heard anybody make that case recently?

Of course, many politicians of that generation had used money or connections to evade the Vietnam draft. This maverick got “a letter in the mail offering a free physical examination,” which he passed. Combat wounds forced the amputation of his right leg just below the knee. Eight months at the Philadelphia

Naval Hospital followed.

He admitted bitterness at his fate,” but I had my life saved by that hospital, which wasn't there because the Navy decided to put it there. It was there because of a law the Congress passed to build the hospital, to appropriate the money necessary to hire the doctors and the nurses and all the other people who gave me the opportunity to get my life back.

“When I was discharged from the Navy, my fellow citizens paid for free health care and a monthly check while I put my life back together. Now I know there are a lot of people who think that getting a check in the mail makes you lazy — it didn't do that to me.

It made me grateful to live in a country as great as this one.”

Back home in Nebraska and manifestly unlazy, he built a successful chain of restaurants and health clubs. Elected governor in 1982, he dated the sultry Debra Winger, who was in Lincoln to film “Terms of Endearment” and after one successful term with a 70 percent favorable job rating, chose not to run for re-election.

Elected to the Senate in 1988, he angered many Democrats by championing entitlement reform, which included raising the Social Security retirement age to 70. He infuriated Republicans and more than a few Democrats by opposing the bill to outlaw same-sex marriage. Armchair commandos were furious at his leadership in normalizing U.S. relations with Vietnam and his forceful opposition to a constitutional amendment to criminalize flag-burning: “Patriotism calls upon us to be brave enough to endure and withstand such an act, to tolerate the intolerant.”

Now Bob Kerrey, the only U.S. senator in the last 147 years to earn the nation's highest military citation, the Medal of Honor — and after spending his post-Senate years as president of the New School University in New York — seeks again the Nebraska Senate seat he left in 2000. Attacked by the organized left as insufficiently liberal and unreliably independent, Kerrey is defended by two of Washington's most respected arms-control advocates, John Isaacs and David Cohen, who cite Kerrey's record of seeking to reduce nuclear arsenals, supporting Senate ratification of the Chemical Weapons Convention and urging a worldwide ban of landmines.

As this maverick once told me: “Let us cast aside the conspiracy theories and the notion that we are victims of our own government. What nonsense! ... We've got more freedom than any country on the face of the earth.”

If you think that the Senate in 2012 could use a large dose of candor and independence, then we have just the maverick for you.

NEW YORK – The young girl shows off her big, comfy koala hat and forms playful hearts with her fingers as she drops the question on YouTube: “Am I pretty or ugly?”

“A lot of people call me ugly, and I think I am ugly. I think I’m ugly, and fat,” she confesses in a tiny voice as she invites the world to decide.

And the world did.

The video, posted Dec. 17, 2010, has more than 4 million views and more than 107,000 anonymous, often hateful responses in a troubling phenomenon that has girls as young as 10 — and some boys — asking the same question on YouTube with similar results.

Some experts in child psychology and online safety wonder whether the videos, with anywhere from 300 to 1,000 posted, represent a new wave of distress rather than simple self-questioning or pleas for affirmation or attention.

How could the creators not anticipate the nasty responses, even the tender tweens uploading videos in violation of YouTube’s 13-and-over age policy? Their directness, playful but steadfast, grips even those accustomed to life’s open Internet channel, where revolutions and executions play out alongside the ramblings of anybody with digital access.

Commenters on YouTube curse and declare the young video creators “attention whores,” ask for sex and to see them naked.

They wonder where their parents are and call them “fugly” and worse.

“Y do you live, and kids in africa die?” one responder tells the girl in the koala hat who uses the name Kendal and lists her age as 15 in her YouTube profile, though her demeanor suggests she was far younger at the time.

Another commenter posts: “You need a hug.. around your neck.. with a rope..”

Some offer support and beg Kendal and the other young faces to take down their “Am I Pretty?” and “Am I Ugly?” videos and feel good about themselves instead.

Much has been made of cyberbullying and pedophiles who cruise the Internet, and of low self-esteem among pre-adolescents and adolescents, especially girls, as their brains continue to develop.

There have been similar “hot or not” memes in the past, but as more young people live their lives online, they’re clearly more aware of the potential for negative consequences.

“Negative feedback that is personal is rarely easy to hear at any age, but to tweens and teens who value as well as incorporate feedback into their own sense of worth, it can be devastating,” said Elizabeth Dowdell, a nursing professor at Villanova University in suburban Philadelphia. She has researched child Internet safety and risk behavior in adolescents in partnership with the Justice Department.

In another video posted by Kendal, she offers to “do two dares” on camera, inviting her open-channel audience to come up with some as she holds a little white stuffed monkey.

In heavy eye makeup and neon orange nail polish, a girl who calls herself Faye not only asks the pretty/ugly question but tells in other videos of being bullied at school, suffering migraines that have sent her to the hospital and coping with the divorce of her parents.

“My friends tell me that I’m pretty,” she says. “It doesn’t seem like I’m pretty, though, because, I don’t know, it just doesn’t, because people at school, they’re like, ‘Faye you’re not pretty at all.’”

She narrates a slideshow of still close-ups of herself to make the judging easier (she’s had more than 112,000 views) and joins other girls who have posted videos on another theme, “My Perfect Imperfection,” that have them noting what they hate and love about the way they look.

“I just don’t like my body at all,” says Faye as she pulls up her sweat shirt to bare her midriff.

Faye’s profile lists her age as 13. Tracked down in suburban Denver, her mom, Naomi Gibson, told ABC’s “Good Morning America” she knew nothing of the video until reporters started to call. “I was floored,” she said.

Faye told ABC she has been called names and gossiped about behind her back.

“Deep down inside, all girls know that other people’s opinions don’t matter,” she said. “But we still go to other people for help because we don’t believe what people say.”

A third girl who uploaded one of the pretty/ugly videos in September attempts a few model poses in childlike pedal pushers and a long, multicolored T-shirt after posing the question. She takes down her ponytail and brushes her hair as she stares into the camera.

“If you guys are wondering, I am 11,” she offers. Her video has been viewed more than 6,000 times.

“COMMUNICATE WITH YOUR PARENTS AND CLEAN YOUR ROOM!!! BUT TAKE THIS TERRIBLE VIDEO DOWN YOU ARE A CHILD AND SHOULD NOT HAVE THIS KIND OF ACCESS TO THE INTERNET,” one commenter screams.

None of the three girls responded to private messages on YouTube seeking comment from The Associated Press. Gibson told ABC she was considering revoking her daughter’s YouTube privileges, but stopped short of demanding that Faye take down the video.

“Hopefully it will open up the eyes of the parents,” Gibson said. “The kids aren’t letting their parents know what’s wrong, just like Faye didn’t let me know.”

YouTube would not comment directly about the “Am I Pretty?” controversy, but it issued a statement advising parents to visit the site’s safety center for tips on how to protect their kids online.

The site’s posting policy prohibits videos and comments “containing harassment, threats or hate speech” and encourages users to flag such material for review, the statement said.

Emilie Zaslow, a media studies professor at Pace University in New York, said today’s online world for young people is only just beginning to be understood by researchers.

When the Internet is your diary and your audience is global, she said, “The public posting of questions such as “Am I ugly?” which might previously have been personal makes sense within this shift in culture.”

Add to that the unattainable pressures of the beauty industry, a dose of reality TV, where ordinary people can be famous, and superstars who are discovered via viral video on YouTube, she said.

“These videos could be read as a new form of self-mutilation in line with cutting and eating disorders,” Zaslow said.

That potential is real, added Nadine Kaslow, a family psychologist and professor of behavioral sciences at Emory University in Atlanta.

“There’s this constant messaging about looks and beauty,” she said. “Their world is taking it to a new level. It can be humiliating, there may be a lot of shame, and you start to become public objects instead of being your own person.”

Offering your place in line is thoughtful thing to do

DEAR ABBY: Whenever I see a pregnant woman or an elderly person in line behind me who seems uncomfortable or tired, I always want to let them go ahead of me. Is this regarded as a nice gesture, or does it make them feel pathetic and helpless? I do it with the best intentions, but I don't want to offend anyone.

RACHEL IN TENNESSEE
DEAR RACHEL: It's regarded as a thoughtful gesture. If someone feels that your deference is offensive, then he or she is free to refuse your generous offer. And if that happens — which I doubt will happen frequently — do not blame yourself for having extended the courtesy. DEAR ABBY: I work in a hospital, and I'm sick and tired of people "bombing" us with their perfume/cologne at levels as suffocating as tear gas. Many patients here have breathing difficulties such as emphysema, COPD and asthma. Please have some consideration for your fellow man and stop at one squirt if you must use it at all. If we can smell you before we see you, or if we are still suffering from the perfume-induced migraine you caused long after you're gone, then you used WAY TOO MUCH.

HAD ENOUGH IN BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
DEAR HAD ENOUGH: You're absolutely right. When it comes to fragrances, more isn't better — a little dab will do ya. Applying too much is not only offensive, but actually can make some well people sick and sick people sicker. And this is true not only in hospitals, but also in elevators, offices and gyms. DEAR ABBY: You printed a letter from me on Sept. 26, 2011. It was signed "Looking for a Date — in the Future." Thank you for printing it, and I'd like to give you an update on my life. I now realize that men have been approaching me quite frequently, but instead of showing outright interest and asking me for a date, they ask me to "hang out" or if I'm coming over to their place — as if they're confirming plans we never made. Because of this I have been on a few dates that I didn't realize WERE dates until after the fact. But I have also been on several real dates with one particular man I'm now seeing exclusively. When I saw him, I actually took the first step and introduced myself to him instead of waiting for him to notice and approach me. I'm so glad I did because although I always hoped that soul mates exist, I was hesitant to believe that "you just know." But I do! Better yet, he does, too. He's the kindest, most thoughtful, respectful man I have ever met, and I know I'm lucky to have found him. I feel silly and disappointed in myself for having gotten married before without feeling this way, but I'm happily learning from my mistake. I hope you'll print this so it will give others hope when it feels like there is no hope to be had. Thanks again, Abby.

HAPPY READER IN TRIANGLE, VA.
DEAR HAPPY READER: You were sweet to write and give me an update. Not all my readers do, and it's always nice to read about happy endings. After reviewing your letter and looking back at the first one you wrote, I'm reminded that sometimes things happen when they're meant to and not before. In other words, you thought men weren't interested in you, but the truth was you weren't ready for them to be. I wish you and your special someone a happy future together.

ASTROLOGY

The times ahead could become very busy for you, when you simultaneously involve yourself in several endeavors. As long as you don't get overwhelmed, you'll have fun becoming successful.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) – The moment you get your prospects nodding in agreement with you, stop pushing. You're a pretty good salesperson, but even you can oversell and cause your customers to run for cover.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Watch your wallet when hanging out with a friend who seems to think of your resources as being his or hers, as well. This manipulator might put the bite on you once again.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – When it comes to dealings with a close associate, take nothing for granted. Unless agreements are put in writing, you might mean one thing while your pal means something else entirely.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A close friend whom you help all the time might be looking the other way when you need his or her assistance. Learn from this and don't forget the moral of the story.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Don't fight the tide if a friend who usually backs you up decides to side with another. This person might find him or herself in a position where he or she has no other choice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – It might be brave, but it may also be stupid to single-handedly champion an unpopular cause. There might be a good reason why everyone is against the notion.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – If you discover that someone hasn't been as frank or honest with you as you've been with him or her, from here on in you'd better be extremely selective of what you tell this person.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) – Stand up for your rights if and when you feel you are getting a raw deal, especially when it involves something important. If you silence your voice, the other person wins.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) – Owing to a great divergence of opinion, forming a partnership might be a hindrance rather than a help to you. In order to be effective, your aims must be in harmony with your cohort's.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) – Just because you were lucky in the past in terms of getting someone to take care of something that you should have seen to yourself, it doesn't mean that you will be so fortunate again. Use your own elbow grease.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Something that starts out to be light-hearted could take on a serious nature and will no longer be fun, if you're not careful. Don't allow competitiveness to enter the picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) – Your usual good judgment might not be up to snuff, so when it comes to career matters, you should proceed with caution. You could be trumped if you mistakenly think you have all the aces.

BOOK REVIEW

Book explores journalist's murder

BY JESSICA GRESKO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

"Killing the Messenger: A Story of Radical Faith, Racism's Backlash, and the Assassination of a Journalist" (Crown), by Thomas Peele: On Aug. 2, 2007, the editor of a small weekly newspaper in Oakland, Calif., was assassinated on his way to work. Within hours it was clear: Oakland Post editor Chauncey Bailey had been killed over a story.

It had been three decades since a journalist was murdered in the United States because of his work, and reporters were shocked into action. Over the next four years, a group of journalists came together to finish Bailey's work. Through stories they exposed the violent cult behind Bailey's murder, a group that ran Oakland's Your Black Muslim Bakery. Now one of those reporters, Thomas Peele, has turned what they learned into a book.

Peele deserves particular credit for resisting any temptation to make Bailey a martyr or to gloss over his failings. Instead, readers are told bluntly that Bailey had a reputation for "hasty reporting, poor writing, and questionable ethics." The story that cost him his life was sloppily written.

Peele's book is the exact opposite, a story told with the authority and nuance that comes with exhaustive research.

At times, however, it can seem that Peele feels duty-bound to record every detail he knows, a habit that can get in the way of advancing the story. Readers won't care that police used "interview room two" to talk to a man involved in Bailey's killing, or that from a certain hill in East Oakland planes taking off from the airport appear eye level after about 10 seconds. Sections of the book that chronicle the history of the Black Muslim movement are necessary but can also feel academic.

Without a doubt "Killing the Messenger" will stand as the definitive work on Bailey's murder and Oakland's Your Black Muslim Bakery. But readers may find themselves wondering if the book could have been both complete and more concise.

Paradise falls to politics in 'The Boiling Season'

BY JENNIFER KAY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

"The Boiling Season" (Harper), by Christopher Hebert: Allegories about the morality of international development projects are rarely as subtle and lyrical as Christopher Hebert's debut novel, "The Boiling Season."

The novel is set on an unnamed Caribbean island, but it's hard to read the story as taking place anywhere other than Haiti. The wealthy live behind walls on a protected hillside, literally looking down at the capital's teeming slums below. Political careers are built on money and brutality, and the island's racial divide is the lingering legacy of colonial rule.

Seeking refuge from the country's many upheavals is Alexandre, a naive young man whose sole ambition is to leave the slums behind him. He first gains access to the world of privilege as the valet to an important senator, and he then uses those connections to secure himself the position of caretaker of a neglected estate even farther up into the mountains. Busily transforming the estate into an opulent resort for a wealthy American businesswoman, Alexandre chooses not to see the civil war brewing just beyond his gates.

Madame Freeman, as Alexandre calls the busi-nesswoman, spends a lot of time and money molding the estate into what she thinks the island needs, while she isolates herself from the island's politics. When a sprawling shantytown pops up in the surrounding fields, she paints the structures closest to the road in bright colors to disguise their poverty from her guests.

As it becomes clear that she cannot control what's happening beyond her walls, she abandons the estate, leaving Alexandre ill-prepared to face the people he's tried to escape all his life. In "The Boiling Season," those who seek to impose order on what they perceive as chaos are as vulnerable to corruption as the system they promised to change.

ABA, CHINA

China's stifling lockdown of this Tibetan town has not only been about patrolling its sleepy streets, but also policing the minds of a community at the center of self-immolation protests against Chinese rule.

Soldiers with helmets, rifles, sticks and shields march in rows along this monastery town's main road against a backdrop of snow-speckled mountains, while police stare at passing cars, scanning license plates and faces of passengers for unwelcome visitors. In school dormitory rooms in the county, there are random checks for books that go against the ruling Communist Party establishment, and the constant questions about political leanings.

"They'll ask you questions and if you answer with your true feelings, they will be very unhappy. If you keep quiet, they will also be unhappy," said a Tibetan teacher at a school in Aba county and who spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of government reprisals.

"They want you to say that the party is good and their policies are good," he added.

Teachers also are banned from making any mention, positive or negative, of the Tibetan spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, the teacher said during an interview in the neighboring county of Hongyuan.

Earlier this week, an Associated Press reporter managed to get through several checkpoints along the road leading to Aba, for a rare glimpse of a town that has been under lockdown for more than three years, as well as an apparent uptick in security this week ahead of sensitive anniversaries.

The Aba township government referred telephoned questions about the heavy police presence to Aba prefecture, where government and Communist Party offices denied that security was high.

The town sits among high-altitude valleys grazed by yaks on the Tibetan plateau in southwestern Sichuan province. The town's Kirti Monastery, a large compound with an enormous white stupa, occupies a position in Tibetan society like that of a major university. Its monks have been at the forefront of unrest since Tibetan communities across western China rose up in a rebellion in 2008 that was quashed by a massive and continuing show of force. Many of the nearly two dozen Tibetans who set themselves on fire in the past year were monks or former monks from Kirti.

During this week's trip, the county surrounding Aba was cordoned off with roadblocks, usually manned by paramilitary police in green uniforms. On the way into town, a large signboard declared in Chinese, with no translation in the local Tibetan language: "A peaceful Aba is built by all, a peaceful Aba is shared by all."

Police stood close by as Tibetans huddled with crimson-robed monks over games, repaired cars or sawed wood. Multicolored prayer flags strung up on rooftops or tied to lamp-posts fluttered in the wind.

Plainclothes security men, easily identifiable by their close-cropped hair, dark clothing and sunglasses, sat on the sidewalk, newspapers in hand.

Barricades and a police minivan were perched at the junction to the narrow lane leading to the monastery. The first thing visible down the lane was a large white-and-blue police station, a Chinese flag atop it.

Internet and cell phone text messaging services in the area have been cut. Only telephone calls are allowed, and many believe that most calls are tapped. Describing a code he uses to ask friends in Aba about trouble with authorities, the teacher said: "Sometimes I ask them, 'Is the wind over at your end strong?' If they say it's strong, then there is a problem."

The authorities have dragged Tibetans working in the governments of neighboring counties to serve as surveillance staff in Aba, putting them in the awkward position of policing their ethnic brethren, said another Tibetan teacher, from Hongyuan, who stayed for three days in Aba last week.

The Tibetans have been deployed with red armbands at shop and hotel entrances, said the teacher, who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

"When ordered to, they don't dare to say 'I won't go,'" he said. "Once they get there, the people in Aba look at them accusingly, as if to say: 'You're a Tibetan and you're also coming here to treat us this way?'"

By nightfall, the street turns quiet and most security forces retire to hotels, while four or five military trucks patrol until morning, the teacher said.

Security appeared to be tightening ahead of March, a month of sensitive anniversaries including that of the deadly anti-government riot among Tibetans in Lhasa in 2008, when frustration about Beijing's constant vilification of the exiled Dalai Lama boiled over. The period also marks the anniversary of the Dalai Lama's flight from the region in 1959 after an abortive uprising.

While the Chinese government has sought to win over the region by boosting economic growth, Tibetans worry about the gradual erosion of their culture and religion amid an influx of majority Han Chinese.

"In the people's hearts, what they probably can't stand the most is that the authorities scold our living Buddha, the Dalai Lama. We cannot stand it when they scold him," the teacher said. "He's the person we are most loyal to."

Dozens of security vehicles poured into the Aba area throughout the first few days of the week, lights flashing. They drove past a school where a red painted slogan on a wall reminded students: "Without the Communist Party, Tibetan areas would not be where they are today."

Tunisian Islamists spark fear of culture war

BY PAUL SCHEMM

TUNIS, Tunisia – Every Friday, bearded men in shish-length robes demonstrate in Tunisia's capital against perceived insults to Islam in a country once known for its aggressive secularism. They have occasionally turned violent, attacking secular intellectuals and harassing women for their style of dress.

This emerging movement of believers known as Salafis has seemingly appeared out of thin air — and prompted fears of a culture war in this North African country of 10 million.

Since the overthrow of President Zine El Abidine Ben Ali in January 2011 unleashed a string of Arab uprisings, Islam has blossomed in Tunisia in a way it wasn't allowed to do for half a century.

New religious freedoms have also opened the way for the Salafis, who are now in a daily battle for hearts and minds with equally hardline secular elements entrenched in the media and the elite. Television stations, Western embassies and government offices have all felt the conservatives' wrath.

On Friday, hundreds of bearded men and veiled women converged on the public television building accusing it of "sanitizing figures of the old regime" and calling for a purging of staff members who still promote the ideas of the old ruling party.

Caught between the Salafis and the secularists are the moderate Islamists who won Tunisia's first free elections and are trying to build a democratic model for countries that followed Tunisia down this still uncertain revolutionary path.

The Salafis say they are just reclaiming rights long denied.

"Tunisians are thirsty for religious knowledge," said Mohammed Bedoui, a young adherent of the Hizb al-Tahrir, or Liberation party, which calls for the return of the Islamic caliphate. "The regime of Ben Ali neglected the religious universities and the Tunisian imams just can't answer to the demand."

The war of words is taking place against a backdrop of armed radical movements just over the porous borders in neighboring Algeria and Libya, and there are worries that Tunisia's aggressive demonstrations could evolve into an armed struggle if the competing demands are not handled carefully.

Secular intellectuals describe the Salafis as backward and engaging in a wholesale assault against freedom of expression and Tunisia's progressive traditions. The religious conservatives — distinctive with their mustache-less beards, short robes and sneakers — counter that their religion is under daily attack.

"The demonstrations are a response to the provocations of the secularists and the leftists, particularly the polemic against the niqab (face-covering veil) in universities," said Bedoui.

The Salafis cite the broadcast of blasphemous movies, publication of semi-nude photos of models in newspapers and bans on women wearing the veil as attempts to target and provoke them. They call the secularists leftover supporters of the old dictator.

In one of their most high profile sit-ins, demonstrators stalled exams at a university near Tunis for weeks protesting a ban on female students wearing the niqab during exams.

On Wednesday, fights broke out between leftist student union members and Salafis on the campus, resulting in five injured. At one point, a Salafi student tore down the Tunisian flag and replaced it with a black standard bearing the Muslim profession of faith.

In October's elections, the moderate Islamist party Ennahda dominated the polls, though most believe that people voted for them not out of religious conviction but because they trusted them to do away with the old system and get the country back on track.

Said Ferjani, a high ranking member of Ennahda, told The Associated Press that the last thing they wanted right now was a culture war between the Salafis and what he calls the "secular fundamentalists."

"We are dealing with the business of government, we have floods in the north, a sinking economy and these people are talking about the burqa and the hijab (headscarf)," he said with exasperation. "I don't think they are very grown up."

Those sympathizing with the Salafis' ultraconservative views are estimated to be a small minority — Ferjani suggests just 3 percent of the population — but they are locked in a cycle of provocation and reaction with the secular elite that's spilling out into the streets.

"There is a war of lifestyles, someone from one group wants to impose their lifestyle on the other group," said Ferjani. "They each believe in freedom of speech only for themselves."

During the election campaign, leftist parties tried to paint Ennahda as closet conservatives seeking to drag the country back to the Middle Ages. Voters didn't agree, but now with the rise of the vocal Salafi minority, secularists have found the "bearded menace" they have been looking for.

The secularist opposition maintains that Ennahda not only sympathizes with many of the Salafi positions, but may be actually promoting them.

"Sometimes the line between the Salafis and Ennahda's activists are a bit blurred," said Kamel Labidi, a former journalist now heading the committee rewriting the country's media law.

Under Ben Ali, some of the Salafis joined armed groups that were quickly squashed. But now with Libya next door flush with weapons from the civil war, the means for a new armed rebellion are easily at hand.

Associated Press

An ultraconservative Muslim demonstrates at the Manouba university in Tunis, after scuffles erupted between Salafists students and members of a leftist students union. Ultraconservative Muslim students blocked student access and occupied offices in January 2012, calling for gender segregated classrooms and instruction, and a lifting of a ban on the enrollment of women wearing conservative face veils.

On Feb. 2 border guards stopped a car in the south filled with three bearded men at a checkpoint who opened fire with assault rifles before fleeing into nearby olive groves, sparking a major police security operation. Two of the men were shot dead; the third, who was captured, revealed the existence of a violent network with dozens of members across the country. While such incidents are rare, elements of the Salafi movement have shown a disturbing tendency toward bullying behavior, such as harassing women in smaller towns for not abiding by conservative dress.

In one incident a prominent secular intellectual and a newspaper editor were punched and kicked by a crowd of Salafis protesting outside a courtroom.

Ferjani of Ennahda said that the government is trying a lenient approach with the Salafis so that they aren't further radicalized, attempting to address their concerns with education and religious debate rather than just denouncing them as backward.

"If you push these people, you are empowering them," he warned.

Running Out of Gas

In life we are on-the-go every minute of the day. High paced and full on we meet each obstacle with a head on ferocity. With all this whirling around us, when do we have time for our families, for ourselves, for God? We don't. Just as a car runs out of gas... so will we. If we do not make the time for important fuelings such as family and God, we will dry up and become empty. That's when we will have to take the time to refuel. Doesn't it make sense to refuel before we dry up?

AMISH COOK

Family prepares beef to stock up the freezer

BY LOVINA EICHER
THE AMISH COOK

It is 7 a.m. and our six youngest children just left for school. I thought I would get this column written right away this morning. I am battling a bad head cold which kept me awake a lot during the night. It makes for a very tired mind and it doesn't help matters any when I think of the extra busy week ahead.

Friday evening we butchered a 1,280 pound beef. We are glad temperatures stayed cold with the thermometer now showing 20 degrees. With the mild temperatures during the winter it can be tricky to butcher meat. The girls and I plan to start putting up the beef tomorrow. Joe and the children will help when they get home. I enjoy the job of cutting up beef even though it is a big job.

We washed laundry this morning because daughter, Elizabeth, will go to work this afternoon. While Elizabeth is working, Susan and I plan to get the tables ready for the beef. We want to get everything ready today so we can tackle the big job tomorrow. Hopefully by then I will be feeling better as well. I will do some canning but not as much as I used to. It is so much easier to freeze everything.

I like canned beef chunks for soups and canned hamburger for casseroles. The sun is shining brightly already but next week it will be an hour later with the time change. I always like to see the sun come out but even more now that we have the solar-panels to run our freezer. We want to see how much room we have in the freezer after the beef is done. If we have enough room we might butcher a hog or two if the weather stays cold enough.

I still have a few bags of sausage left in the freezer from last year. I mostly use the sausage in chili soup and in making gravy. Also, I use sausage in casseroles or pizzas sometime. A person can't be thankful enough when there is plenty of meat in the house for another year. And before we know it gardening time will be here again. The garden also helps fill the jars with food. God has been good to us but let us not forget to take time to thank Him for our blessings.

Our thoughts and prayers go to the families hit by the tornadoes last week. We wish them God's blessings in their recovery and rebuilding. Although we were not in the area of the tornadoes, one of the big red oak trees in our yard uprooted during a windstorm. We are very thankful the children were not home at the time because they could have been playing in the front yard. That night it was a nice sunny evening with temperatures in the upper 60s.

Yesterday we had a nice surprise visit from Joe's Uncle Solomon in Ohio. Joe's cousin's son Ben was also along. The girls and I were making breakfast, so we had them eat breakfast with us. On the menu was eggs, fried potatoes, bacon, Swiss and Colby cheese, fried brains I fixed from beef we butchered. Uncle Solomon helped Joe eat them. I dip them in egg and roll them in flour and then fry them. They come out looking just like a chicken breast, you could fool someone it looks so much like chicken. I never tasted them and I don't think I want to, but Joe likes them. I told Joe I am glad that is over with for another year. Three boys tasted the brains and said they were good but none of them asked for seconds.

The highlight of butchering beef for our family is having rare beef again. It is steak sliced real thin and deep-fried a few seconds on each side. Grandpa Graber added a lot of pepper to it and Mom also peppered hers a lot. Joe and I like ours very peppery but the children just a little. So I fry one stack with a lot of pepper and another stack with less for the children.

Last week, Jacob, Emma, Joe and I attended the viewing of a second cousin in a nearby community. He was a bishop in that community and 69 years old. Our sympathy goes to the family.

With it being beef butchering time I thought I'd share this recipe which makes for a good casserole.

BEEF CHUNK CASSEROLE

1 pound canned beef chunks
3 eggs
2 cups milk
1 cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons butter
6 slices of bread, cubed
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 quart corn
1 cup grated cheese

Place cooked meat in a baking dish. Beat eggs, milk, salt and add broken up bread, corn, and onions. Pour on top of the meat. Melt butter and pour over top. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Remove the casserole from the oven and sprinkle cheese over all and bake until cheese melts.

Pope Benedict XVI denounces cultural shift toward gay marriage in U.S.

VATICAN CITY (RNS) — Pope Benedict XVI on Friday (March 9) denounced the “powerful political and cultural currents” that are working to “alter the legal definition of marriage” in the United States.

The pope's condemnation of same-sex marriage came in an address to a delegation of bishops from Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota, headed by Archbishop John Nienstedt of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Maryland legalized gay marriage March 1 and Minnesota will be one of five states to vote on the issue in the coming months. Minnesota's bishops are campaigning for a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage.

Benedict stressed that “sexual difference cannot be dismissed as irrelevant to the definition of marriage,” and called on the church to continue its “reasoned defense of marriage.”

The pope also echoed bishops' concerns over their battle with the Obama administration on the contraception mandate. “Threats to freedom of conscience, religion and worship” in the United States, he said, “need to be addressed urgently.”

The pontiff also challenged the bishops to act more incisively against the “widespread practice of cohabitation,” which is not only “gravely sinful” but also “damaging to the stability of society.”

The church, he said, must do more to promote the “virtue of chastity” in a society that “tends to misunderstand and even ridicule” it.

In a veiled reference to the sexual abuse crisis, Benedict also said that the church must continue to dedicate itself to educating the young, despite being “chastened by the events of the past decade.”

Three times isn't so hard

With the high school basketball season just about over, that means one thing: we won't be hearing any more about how hard it is for prep teams to beat an opponent three times in one season. But is it really that hard to three-peat within the same season? Or is it one of those silly bits of conventional wisdom that sportscasters say to fill dead air?

What we're going to do here is actually go through the 2nd Region schedules over the last 10 years for nine of the teams and see if this theory ("It's hard to beat a team three times in a season") holds up. The teams are the four in our local coverage area (Madisonville-North Hopkins, Hopkins County Central, Dawson Springs and Webster County), the one remaining 7th District team (Caldwell County), and to place the burden upon the prosecution, all four teams from the most topsy-turvy district in the region, the 5th District (Lyon County, Livingston Central, Crittenden County and Trigg County).

DAVE O'CONNELL
THE MESSENGER

Beyond that, the rules are these: the teams must both be in the region and within seven games of each other in the overall standings (to weed out obvious mismatches like, say, this year's Hopkinsville/Fort Campbell games) or have played the third game in the 2nd Region tournament. And we'll stick with just the boys games, since that's where the upsets tend to be. If the theory can't work under these favorable conditions, it's probably not a strong one.

2012: A bit of a split decision for the theory, with three of out a possible five teams winning that third game to avoid the season sweep. Caldwell and Webster both rallied from double-digit deficits, while Lyon kept a 21-win Trigg team from making regionals. They couldn't avoid the sweep against Livingston Central in the district title game, however. Crittenden's three wins over Dawson Springs came in the regular season, thanks to the magic of midseason tournaments.

2011: A bad year for teams gunning for three-game sweeps, as all four relevant rivalries failed to result in the brooms coming out. Unlike the five cases in 2011, none of these matchups entered their third installments with one team having a chance to sweep. Livingston Central actually played Trigg and Lyon four times apiece, beating Trigg three times and splitting with Lyon.

2010: Five teams, two sweeps. Or maybe one-and-a-half sweeps. Caldwell was able to pull off the three-game sweep, dispatching Dawson Springs. They should have stopped there, however; the two played a fourth game, this time at Dawson Springs for a change, and the Panthers pulled off the 60-54 upset. Henderson was the other one, sweeping Webster in three. Webster was denied their own sweep when Union County beat them in the teams' second meeting of the season, but the Trojans got their revenge in the district semifinals.

2009: Meatloaf would like this year, for two out of three teams sweeping ain't bad. Central did it in style, getting their third win against Lyon in the 2nd Region playoffs, while Webster swept Union. That Central game was a case of matters being made worse for Lyon, as they were deprived of a district title when Trigg avenged two earlier losses and beat them in the championship game, 73-62.

2008: More Central sweeps here, with the Storm three-balling Dawson Springs. There's no getting away from Lyon, either; the Lyons staved off the sweep against Trigg in a first-round district game and completed one of their own against Livingston Central.

2007: A good year for sportscasters on auto-pilot, as three of the four rivalries ended in split decisions, though of those three, only Crittenden came into a

UK advances to SEC final

BY BRETT MARTEL
AP SPORTS WRITER

NEW ORLEANS — If John Calipari's top-ranked Kentucky Wildcats encounter late-game adversity in the NCAA tournament, they'll know how to handle it.

Anthony Davis had 15 points and 12 rebounds, and Kentucky held off Florida 74-71 on Saturday in the semifinals of the Southeastern Conference tournament.

"I've got this team that has that will to win. They want to win. They have great pride," said Calipari, whose team has trailed in the second half of each of its first two SEC tournament games and never led either by more than single digits.

"We're just really a young team that — every one of these experiences is good for my team."

Terrence Jones added 15 points and nine rebounds for the Wildcats (32-1), who've won 24 straight and play next in today's tournament final against Vanderbilt, a 65-53 winner over Mississippi in the other semifinal.

Doron Lamb scored 16 points and Marquis Teague added 15, with each hitting a pair of key free throws in the last 15 seconds to secure the win against a Florida team which shot 48 percent, including 11 of 22 from 3-point range.

"We know people are going to give us their best shot every game, especially coming down to tournament time," Teague said. "It really doesn't matter how much you win by. We just want to make sure we get a win."

Calipari was particularly pleased by the way Teague, who also had five assists, responded to a chat in the coach's hotel room Friday night, hours after the freshman point guard had managed only two points in a close victory over LSU.

"I just told him again, 'You can't play to score because that hurts our team, but you have to pick your spots and score in transition layups to keep them honest if they don't play you (to shoot),'"

Calipari said. "It's hard playing point guard for us. ... He was outstanding."

Erik Murphy had a career-high 24 points, on 9 of 12 shooting, and nearly lifted Florida (23-10) to the upset with nine points in the final minutes. Bradley Beal added 20 points, but it was not enough to prevent the Gators from falling to 0-3 against the Wildcats this season.

"We made some shots, we played pretty good defense for the most part," Murphy said. "With these two teams, at this stage of the season, meeting for the third time, we pretty much know each other, so I think that's what kept it real close."

Michael Kidd-Gilchrist had 10 points for Kentucky, which shot 45 percent (27 of 60) and outrebounded Florida 39-25. The Wildcats grabbed 16 offensive rebounds.

There was a significant disparity in free throws, with Kentucky hitting 15 of 20 and Florida going 2 for 2.

Cats' resilience puts them one win from title

NEW ORLEANS

You have to hand it to the Kentucky Wildcats, who on numerous occasions during Saturday's 74-71 conquest of Florida in the Southeastern Conference Tournament semifinals, showed precisely why they are the No. 1 team in America — and an odds-on favorite to win the 2012 NCAA championship.

Coming off a less-than-stellar effort and performance in a 60-51 quarterfinal victory over LSU, the Wildcats got the Gators' best game of the three the SEC East rivals have played this season. Florida shot nearly 50 percent from the field, made 11 shots from 3-point range, turned the ball over only eight times, and still — the Cats found a way to win.

"I've got a tough team that has a strong will to win and plays with great pride," said UK coach John Calipari, whose team has won all 18 games it has played against league foes this season. "We've got the fifth-youngest team in the country, so every one of these experiences is good for us."

"Florida played a terrific game, but we were able to do what we needed to do down the stretch. Having said that, we were fortunate to walk out with a win. Florida was that good today."

Since losing their only game of the season on a last-second 3-pointer at Indiana back on Dec. 10, the Wildcats have streaked to 24 consecutive victories — few coming tougher than Saturday's.

Kentucky trailed most of the first half, rallied in the final minutes to secure a one-point lead at intermission, then fell behind 54-49 on a 3-pointer by Irving Walker with 11:33 to play.

"We huddled up and said we needed to get some stops," said UK sophomore guard Doron Lamb, who scored a team-high 16 points and led a parade of five Wildcat starters to score in double figures. "If we were going to win, we knew the key would be to shut them down at the defensive end."

Kentucky answered the call, going on a 16-2 run over the next 7½ minutes — Anthony Davis making one of two free throws to put the Cats up 65-56 and send 15,000 or so Big Blue fans into a frenzy.

The Gators, however, would not go gentle into that good afternoon.

Erik Murphy scored seven consecutive points to make it a two-point game and, after the Cats rebuilt their advantage to five on a putback by Davis at 2:20, Florida again sliced its deficit to two on a 3-pointer by splendid freshman Bradley Beal with less than two minutes to play.

UF had a chance to take the lead with just over a minute to play, but Beal misfired on a 3 from the left corner.

UFC flyweight tourney hits snag

BY DAVE O'CONNELL
MESSENGER SPORTS WRITER
DOCONNELL@THE-MESSENGER.COM

Madisonville's own UFC fighter wins in his first ever flyweight bout, until he suddenly doesn't ... in this week's College and Pro Notebook.

Winsanity: Madisonville-born Demetrious "Mighty Mouse" Johnson walked out of the ring in Sydney, Australia on March 3 thinking that he had bested Ian McCall to advance to the first-ever UFC flyweight championship bout. That lasted until the post-fight press conference.

There it was revealed that a scoring error had changed the final result in the UFC on FX 2 flyweight semifinal from a split decision in favor of Johnson (29-28, 28-29, 29-28) to a majority draw (28-28, 29-29, 29-28). Had the score been correctly tabulated at the time, the fight would have gone to a fourth round, but with the match already declared over, the two will be forced to square off again at a later date.

The mixup happened when Craig Waller, executive director of the Combat Sports Authority of New South Wales, incorrectly transcribed judge Sal D'Amato's 10-8 third-round score as a 10-9.

Trojans struggle in first game of season against Trigg

BY THE MESSENGER STAFF

The Webster County baseball team's 2012 campaign got off to a brutal start Saturday, as the Trojans fell on the road to Trigg County in six innings, 10-0.

"We just didn't play very good, sound baseball," Webster coach Tom Welshans said.

Trigg (1-0) took advantage of three errors in the first to go up 5-0, then converted two more errors in the second inning into a 9-0 lead. Webster's Kyler Heady had two hits, but couldn't come across to score, while the Trojan defense accumulated three more errors to finish with eight on the afternoon.

"We just didn't field the baseball well today," Welshans said. "I don't know. It was just one of those days."

Webster is back in action Monday at Edmonson County.

third game looking to sweep (they failed in the district final against Trigg). For its part, Trigg was able to pull off the sweep of Livingston Central.

2006: Livingston Central was able to pull off the three-sweep against Crittenden, although they had to spot Crittenden a game (the teams met four times). Henderson, as they've consistently done up until this season, swept Webster.

2005: North finally pops up here, preventing a Central sweep with a win in the teams' second game. So does the defunct Providence High School, who swept away Dawson Springs. In all, there were four sweeps in eight tries, as four of the five teams who came into the third game with a chance to pull off the trifecta did so.

2004: Seven more rivalries to work with here, with three sweeps (Webster over Union, Crittenden over Livingston, and Lyon over Crittenden). North spotted Central a game, winning the other two, including an overtime district title game win.

2003: Of the nine teams fitting the criterion this year, six avoided the brooms. Dawson Springs, Union and Crittenden came into their third games with Providence, Webster and Trigg, respectively, looking for sweeps, but couldn't do so. Lyon and Trigg split their four games. Again, North spotted Central a game, then took the other two.

In all, that comes to 50 games. Counting any three consecutive games won as a strike against the theory (even ones occurring between teams who met four times), the theory holds up in 30 of the 50 games. (Adding 8th District games probably wouldn't affect things much; a search of the past four years revealed only two relevant matchups— one a sweep, the other not.)

So what can we conclude here? Beating a team three times in a year isn't overly difficult. It isn't exactly an easy task, but a team looking for the sweep should still get it at least 40 percent of the time. And that's the low end of that projection: throw the lopsided matchups into the mix and teams should sweep more often than not. Either way, it's not the sort of feat that's rare enough to be considered "hard."

Oh yeah, there's also another conclusion — poring over more than 100 team schedules will turn your brain to mush.

Kentucky sealed it when Terrence Jones, Marquis Teague and Lamb combined to make six consecutive free throws over the final 34.6 seconds.

"Usually when we get a nine-point lead late, we put teams away," Calipari noted, "but Florida was right there at the end."

This was a white-knuckler, to be sure, but the resilient Cats once again found a way.

"It's a tribute to their kids to do what they've been able to do," Florida coach Billy Donovan said of UK's refuse-to-lose mentality. "They've faced a lot of different challenges in our league over the course of a long season, and they've stepped in and answered all of those challenges."

"They've got a great, great basketball team, and they've proved it time and again."

Now, having overcome strong challenges from LSU and Florida in the Crescent City, the Wildcats are a victory away from winning the program's third consecutive SEC Tournament title in the Calipari era.

"You know, I've said many times how I'm not a fan of (conference) tournaments," he said, "but I told our team after the game that we have to play one more game down here, let's play it to win it."

One resilient basketball team and thousands who have turned this storied city into Blue Orleans could not agree more.

PRO GOLF: CADILLAC CHAMPIONSHIP

Watson goes after his first world title

BY DOUG FERGUSON
AP GOLF WRITER

DORAL, Fla. — Rory McIlroy thought he might have a chance at 59. Tiger Woods opened with three straight birdies and made a charge of his own. None of this bothered Bubba Watson, who figured he could go just as low Saturday at the Cadillac Championship.

All the noise about McIlroy and Woods soon disappeared when Watson started eagle-birdie.

And even when Justin Rose ran off four straight birdies to catch him, Watson responded with a style of golf only he plays. He plunked a man in the gallery on one hole and regained the lead with a birdie. His target on another hole was a man in an orange shirt, and he hit that one to tap-in range for another birdie.

When his wild day ended with what Watson called his best shot of the day — "I chipped a low bullet 7-iron" — on the 18th for a routine par on a hole that makes him nervous, he had a 5-under 67 and a three-shot lead.

If the last two days were not enough evidence, Watson likes to play golf his way.

He has never had a swing coach since his late father showed him the fundamentals at age 10. He once jokingly said he shouldn't take advice from anyone who couldn't beat him. And when asked if his caddie helps him out, Watson replied, "He's not very good. That's why he's a caddie."

Now he's one round away from his first World Golf Championship.

Watson was at 17-under 199, three shots clear of PGA champion Keegan Bradley (66) and Justin Rose, who lost out on playing with Watson for the fourth straight day when he three-putted the 18th from long range and had to settle for a 69.

As for McIlroy, Woods?

They were eight shots behind on a Blue Monster course that is yielding plenty of birdies in moderate wind, but where it's tough to catch a guy with a pink driver who belts it where few others can.

The only other player within five shots of the lead was Peter Hanson of Sweden, who nearly holed a bunker shot from a downhill lie on the 18th and shot 69.

Only once did Watson worry that his shot might go too far.

Having survived a turbulent stretch at Doral — he lost a four-shot lead over Rose in three holes — Watson's lead was back to three shots when he was in a fairway bunker on the 16th, just over 100 yards away. He tried to blast a 64-degree wedge, caught too much of the ball, and saw it sail over the green toward a pond Watson didn't know was there.

It hit a tower, dropped to the side and Watson escaped with bogey. He followed with another wild tee shot on the 17th, though he managed to save par with a good pitch from the front of the green. And on a closing hole he called "ridiculous," he had an easy two-putt par.

"All in all, it was a great day," he said.

No one is ready to concede victory to Watson, even Rose, who has seen enough of his action the last three days. They had a better-ball score of 59 on Friday, and 60 on Saturday.

"Three back, it's a lot to Bubba on this golf course," Rose said. "But at least there's not a lot of guys ahead of you. There's only one guy at 17 under, and the rest of the pack is right there, so it doesn't take much."

Matt Kuchar (66) and Zach Johnson (67) were another shot behind. Adam Scott looked as though he might give Watson a run until the Australian started missing short putts, the pulled his tee shot into the water on the 18th and made double bogey. Scott dropped four shots over the last three holes.

McIlroy played the last six holes in 2 over and still shot 65, while Woods failed to do much after his birdie-birdie-birdie start. He twice made bogey on the par 5s and shot 68. They were eight shots behind.

The wind has been decreasing since the opening round, and so have the scores.

McIlroy hit two fluffy wedges at the start of his round, but he atoned for the second one by chipping in for birdie, and away he went. McIlroy shot 30 on the front nine without making birdie on the two par 5s, then made up for that with a fairway metal into about 18 feet for an eagle on No. 10. That put him 10 under for the tournament, only two off the lead.

Watson was still on the practice range, though, and this was a day when just about everyone went low.

FINAL

"I don't understand how, in a game like that, we get to the free throw line two times ... when you see from our bench in the second half, (Florida forward) Patric Young getting pushed in the back constantly, constantly, constantly, and there's just no whistle," Florida coach Billy Donovan said. "To me, it's really hard to overcome 20 free throws to two. ... I'm not saying we didn't foul them. ... But, I mean, we got to the free throw line two times?"

Florida led 56-51 on Young's jump hook with 10:43 to go, but the Gators' offense suddenly lost its rhythm.

Florida went more than six minutes without scoring while the Wildcats used a 14-0 run to surge in front 65-56.

Jones hit a 3 and added a follow-up one-handed jam of Davis' missed jumper during the spurt. As his 3 swirled through the hoop, Jones turned to the boisterous and heavily pro-Kentucky crowd, made the hand signal for a 3 and held it to his face, looking through the circle formed by his thumb and index finger.

"I'm just trying to win and if we look like we're a little out of place, I just try to get everybody together and calm everybody down," Jones said. "There's a lot of guys that it's their first time being here and I was here last year, so I just try to show that leadership and just show everybody that we still got the control if we play our game."

Just when it appeared the Gators were teetering on collapse, Murphy scored seven straight points to pull Florida to 65-63.

Davis' putback after Teague's missed free throw gave Kentucky a 68-63 lead, but Beal responded with a quick 3 from several feet behind the arc to make it 68-66 in a back-and-forth finish.

Florida shot close to 60 percent through the first 15 minutes and did not trail once until the final seconds of the first half.

Beal hit a 3 to open the game and Murphy made two more soon after, and the Gators hit five of their first eight attempts from deep, with Beal's second putting Florida ahead 31-21.

Florida led 39-32 on Erving Walker's layup with 4:25 left in the half, but Kentucky's defense tightened up after that, not allowing the Gators another point before halftime.

Lamb's 3 ignited an 8-0 run to close the period.

Davis, who had only one point in the first half of Friday's victory over LSU, had a much better start against Florida, and Kentucky needed it. He made four of his first six shots for 10 points, including a 3 that gave Kentucky its first lead of the game at 40-39 15 seconds before halftime.

Get Egg-cited!

Kid-friendly recipes the whole family can enjoy

Cowboy Breakfast Wraps

FAMILY FEATURES

There’s a reason for the adage, “Breakfast is the most important meal of the day.” It’s because breakfast provides an opportunity to get important nutrients that are difficult to make up over the course of the day. In addition, children and adults who eat breakfast regularly tend to have healthier body weights than breakfast skippers. Studies also show that children do better in school when they eat breakfast, most likely because they can concentrate and focus better. Despite this knowledge, however, it is estimated that 12 to 34 percent of children and adolescents skip breakfast on a regular basis.

“Children model their parents’ behavior, so you can’t expect your children to eat a healthy breakfast if you don’t,” said Elizabeth Ward, a registered dietitian and expert on family nutrition. “As a mom of three daughters, I personally love serving Egglan’s Best eggs on my breakfast table. Not only do they taste great, but they contain less saturated fat, double the vitamin D and omega-3 fatty acids, as well as 10 times more vitamin E as ordinary eggs. I even keep some hard-cooked Egglan’s Best eggs on hand for a quick and healthy snack.”

For children who may be picky eaters, scramble up the usual breakfast dishes by getting creative with these kid-tested and mom-approved breakfast recipes from Elizabeth Ward’s kitchen. Additional inspiration for cooking with eggs any time of day can be found at www.egglandsbest.com.

Cowboy Breakfast Wraps

Recipe courtesy of MealMakeoverMoms.com

Makes 4 servings

- 1 6-ounce bag pre-washed baby spinach or 4 cups packed baby spinach
- 1 tablespoon olive oil or canola oil
- Salt and freshly ground black pepper
- 5 large Egglan’s Best eggs, beaten
- ½ cup preshredded reduced-fat cheddar cheese
- 4 8-inch flour tortillas
- ¼ to ½ cup mild salsa

Heat oil in a large nonstick skillet over medium-high heat. Add spinach and cook, stirring occasionally, until spinach wilts, 3 to 5 minutes. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Add eggs and cheese and cook, stirring frequently, until eggs are set, about 2 minutes.

Stack tortillas on a microwave-safe plate, uncovered, and heat in microwave until warmed through, 30 to 45 seconds.

Assemble wraps by placing a quarter of egg mixture on each tortilla. Top with 1 to 2 tablespoons of salsa, wrap burrito style, slice in half, and serve.

Crazy Crepes

Makes 10 to 12 crepes

- 4 Egglan’s Best eggs
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 2 cups all-purpose flour
- 2¼ cups milk
- ¼ cup melted butter

In a medium bowl, combine eggs and salt. Take turns stirring in flour and milk, beating with a whisk until smooth.

Add melted butter and whisk.

Heat a medium skillet on medium-high heat. Melt some butter in the pan. Pour in ¼ cup of the crepe batter, swirling the pan around to coat the bottom evenly.

When the top of the crepe starts to look dry and bottom is just beginning to brown, flip the crepe over with a spatula.

Cook 30 seconds more, then place on a plate. Cover and keep warm while you make the rest.

Crepes can be folded in quarters and dusted with powdered sugar, or topped with syrup.

Boost nutrition by topping a crepe with sliced strawberries or banana (or a combination!) and rolling up. Add a bit of fun by drizzling fat-free chocolate syrup on top.

Berry Delicious Stuffed French Toast Sandwiches

Berry Delicious Stuffed French Toast Sandwiches

Makes 4

For the French toast:

- 8 slices bread (Use whole grain for more fiber and other nutrients.)
- 6 Egglan’s Best eggs
- 1½ cups 1% low-fat milk
- ¾ teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
- Nonstick cooking spray

Filling:

- ¾ cup part-skim milk ricotta cheese or low-fat cottage cheese that’s been blended in the blender or food processor
- 1½ tablespoons sugar
- 1 cup fresh blueberries, raspberries or sliced strawberries

In a shallow bowl or pie plate, lightly whisk eggs; add milk, cinnamon, and vanilla. Whisk until well combined.

Heat nonstick griddle over medium-low heat. Coat with nonstick cooking spray.

Dip one slice of bread in the egg mixture until well coated on both sides, allowing excess to drip into the bowl. Place on the griddle and cook about one minute on each side or until golden brown and the egg has set. Transfer to a plate and cover until ready to serve. Repeat with remaining slices, coating the griddle with cooking spray as needed. Keep cooked French toast warm.

In a small bowl, mix the ricotta cheese and sugar.

Assemble sandwiches: Spread ¼ of the ricotta filling on a slice of French toast. Top with ¼ of the berries. Top with another slice of French toast. Slice each sandwich in half and enjoy.
